

Abstract

A method for increasing the contrast between reflected and background luminescent on an object to be scanned comprising the following steps: targeting a signal on an object to be scanned for luminescence; varying the wavelength and/or intensity of the signal to produce a contrast between the luminescence on the object and any background luminescence; and processing the return signal to remove the background luminescence.